From Chamber's Mome Journal. THE VESPER BOUR.

ON THE COAST OF NORMANDY. Calmly fades the light of day-Faintly sighs the breeze away-Music steals from every bower; 'Tis the lonely vesper hour.

Pilgrims sad, and hoary men, Chant their beads twice o'er again-Sunset's rays now dimly lower O'er the pensive vesper hour.

Twilight mourns in silver gray Daylight's last remaining ray, Weeping gems-s pearly dower-Pale and mystic vesper hour. Fairies from their mossy glade,

Seeking vales now cast in shade.

Sprinkle o'er each closing flower, Tears that cool the vesper hour. Spirit of the azure air ! Veiled in hues so soft, and fair, Weep for transient is thy power

As this balmy vesper hour.

Now, adicu! the beauty dies, And entombed with day it lies; Night now comes-gone is thy power Sad and dreamy vesper hour.
